

Supporting Dyslexic Students in Schools

About the workshop

Dyslexic students face a lot of difficulties and challenges in schools. While many of these struggles are related to the academic aspects of schooling, dyslexic students also face tremendous challenges in handling many other aspects of life that are related to their healthy development and adjustment. However, these aspects are sometimes neglected in the present supportive services for dyslexic students. The present workshop aims at providing counselling staff a holistic framework in understanding the needs and characteristics of dyslexic students, and facilitating them to identify effective strategies that can be utilized in supporting these students.

Workshop contents:

- Understanding the learning characteristics of dyslexic students
- Identifying the social-emotional needs of dyslexic students
- Counselling dyslexic students: The key themes
- Supporting learning of dyslexic students
- Enhancing dyslexic student's self-efficacy and intrinsic motivation in learning
- Career and life planning for dyslexic students

About the Presenters

Dr. Bernard Pak-ho WONG is currently an Assistant Professor of the Department of Counselling and Psychology at Hong Kong Shue Yan University, teaching subjects related to school psychology and developmental psychology at both the undergraduate and postgraduate levels. He is also the Assistant Director of its Counselling and Research Centre.
